Deconstructing Therapy: Performing the Common Sense User. Morten Nissen, Katrine Barington & Morten Halberg. Abstract: In this article, we analyze non-mainstream social work in Denmark. We focus on how what we call a performative approach in both social work and research can expand the understanding of deconstruction. We argue that critical performance exceeds the negative moment of deconstruction, where we only know that we are non-clients, non-psychologists, non-directive.

Therapy: Deconstructing Competitive Commitments. November 9, 2019. Bruce Wilson, PhD. In the human psyche competitive commitments occur when the individual is having difficulty committing due to their commitment being in two or more directions at the same time. These commitments are competing due to the reality they are in direct opposition to one another (i.e., freedom versus security).
