The ancient Greeks were polytheistic and believed in a pantheon of Gods, some of whom were more powerful than others. Though Zeus was the king of the gods, he was not omnipotent, and other deities controlled specific aspects of nature and human endeavor.

What Did the Ancient Greeks Believe In?

The Pelasgian and the Greek strands of the religion of the Greeks can sometimes be disentangled, but the view held by some scholars that any belief related to fertility must be Pelasgian, on the grounds that the Pelasgi were agriculturalists while the Greeks were nomadic pastoralists and warriors, seems somewhat simplistic. Pastoralists and warriors certainly require fertility in their herds—not to mention in their own number.

It was believed that Zeus, the strongest of the gods, had favoured the Trojans, while Hera had favoured the Greeks. Yet Troy fell, like many another city. The Homeric poems here offer an explanation for something that the Greek audience might at any time experience themselves.

Greek religion - Beliefs, practices, and institutions ...

The vast majority of people in ancient Greece really believed in the Greek gods, but there were some dissenters who questioned traditional ideas about the gods and a few people who were not completely sure about the gods' existence. For the most part, people who had doubts about the gods do not seem to have been widely persecuted.

Did the Ancient Greeks Really Believe in Their Myths ...

It pretty clear that at least some level of belief in the gods was part of community life among the ancient Greeks, just as it was for the Romans (community life was more important than personal faith). There was a multitude of gods and goddesses in the polytheistic Mediterranean world.
